

Abstract

An apparatus includes a catheter for insertion into a stomach to introduce air into the stomach through the catheter and a pressure measurement device associated with the catheter to sense a pressure in the stomach. The pressure measurement device is used to determine a gastric yield pressure of the stomach when enough air has been introduced to the stomach to overcome the esophageal-gastric junction.